Basics Of Instrumentation

This method is independent of changes in temperature, pressure, density, and volumetric flow readings. The fluid flowing past the blades of the turbine meter causes it to turn at a velocity proportional to the flow rate. When cooled, the pressure in the filled system returns to its original condition.

Zero suppression indicates you need to lower the nominal zero point. The displacement or movement of the diaphragm is detected by the instrument for which it is the primary element. Can handle slurries and solids.

Its advantage over the bourdon tube is that it can withstand much higher pressures, up to 300 bar 30,000 kPa. The inlet cone angle is 19-23° and the outlet cone angle is 5-15°. It can be filled with the process fluid, but more often is filled with an inert liquid such as glycol.

The scientific community uses the absolute temperature scale. The Standard Atmospheric Pressure is defined at sea-level at 273.0 K 0.0 °C and is 1.01325 bar. The empty space is usually a vacuum.
