One person is the traffic light, and the group of kids across the sand are the cars. Be sure not to focus your attention on just one or two children- establish rules and expectations that apply to the entire group you are caring for. How we communicate with the children, and how we communicate with other adults keeps everyone connected so that our kids can feel safe and secure wherever they want to play.

Another case to consider is that of bullying, and because the children have had over a year without at least moderate interaction with multiple kids, their social structure and interpersonal communication has been heavily affected. If the playground is thought of as a delimited area, for example, children play in that area.

So what can we do to help ensure safer playgrounds and safer behavior for our kids? Playground Challenge This will work with one kid or multiple because playground challenges are customizable. If parents or caregivers are nearby and notice your interaction with the kids, use it as an opportunity to engage and emphasize how their behavior was concerning, and that you intervened only out of caution and good will.
