Black TV Networks: BET, OWN, TV One, Bounce TV in the Age of Peak TV

But Lucy's struggles were presented in a zany, humorous fashion in order to make her ambitious nature less threatening to audiences of that time, when the majority of women did not hold jobs outside of the home.

Not quite a prime time for black families on network TV

Some conservative religious and political groups resent gay activists' success in working with the television networks. Note: The ebook edition does not include photos.

Excerpt

And with the battle for eyeballs likely to become even more intense, a question to be answered is whether there is room for a black TV network to become dominant.

MLK's Son Launching 1st African

The Public Broadcasting Service PBS is the only American network that receives tax money from federal and state governments to support its operations. The organization held meetings with television executives about the lack of minorities on TV and reached agreements in which the networks promised to take steps to increase diversity.

Nielsen report confirms blacks watch more TV than any other group

Many other nations around the world operate television as a government service rather than as a business. As part of a larger effort to reduce regulations affecting the broadcast industry, Congress overturned the in 1989. Only 12 people total have been able to accomplish this, with the latest achievement being listed in 2014.
