Later, the development of synthetic techniques led to a significant reduction in the importance of natural products, and there were concerns that the use of some natural products for medicinal purposes might be completely banned.

Traditional Chinese Medicine

When we are healthy, these medicinal foods can be consumed without restriction such as in daily eating, however when we are sick, the medicinal foods or edible materials are restricted and used as a drug in the traditional sense where the quantity used or consumed is regulated. It is not inherently good or bad to use one method or the other to treat disease. It should be noted that in TCM, several herbs and ingredients are combined according to strict rules to form prescriptions, which are referred to as formulas fang ji in Chinese.

Traditional Chinese Medicine

A number of problems need to be addressed in the future. Service is not limited to patients and helps the caretaker as well. There is a new focus in this edition on chronic illnesses like obesity, diabetes, depression and infertility that are increasing worldwide.
