We know that what he wants is not what is best for him. We are, however, able to critique the portrayal of mental illness and the medications used to treat it.

SILVER LININGS PLAYBOOK

You get the sense that this family really does loved each other but the way they express that love in this movie most of the time was in a violent and disrespectful way that resulted in the cops coming to their house to make sure everything was alright and under control. I could relate to this particular part in this film because it illustrates the paranoia and delusion people with bipolar disorder can experience with they are in a manic or hypomanic state. Despite all odds, Tiffany and Pat are able to work through their own illnesses together to find love and companionship in one other by the time the movie ends.
