Economic Geography

Concluding our confrontation of the slave and the serf economic units, we would like to stress most emphatically that given the same market situation and the same natural and historical conditions the rents achieved in both cases that of the slave and of the serf are not always of the same magnitude; rather, they can differ considerably in level. Like Ricardo, he considered only the differential rent<sup>67</sup> and, like Ricardo, conceded a historical progression in land cultivation,<sup>68</sup> but, following Fr.
