DIFFERENT MODELS OF COLLABORATION BETWEEN NURSING EDUCATION AND SERVI...

Your students can engage with opportunity in person and virtually through , which this year delivered huge value to students from over 130 schools and colleges. Then, when the time comes to continue their education and take the next step in their career, those credentials can easily articulate -- or stack -- toward a higher-level certificate or degree.

Community colleges must bridge the divide between noncredit and credit programs (opinion)

Only 50 percent of high poverty schools have dedicated lines as compared to 72 percent of low poverty schools.

Bridging the Digital Divide in Our Schools

One recent research study suggests that beyond incorporating family and community connections issues into pre-service coursework and curriculum, educator preparation programs can provide their students with opportunities to experience family and community connections firsthand.

Emerging Issues in School, Family, & Community Connections

Colleges may tend to be more informal, or more relaxed, but student work is more independent, and students must be self-sufficient in order to progress. For more vocational courses, such as catering and hairdressing, there is often the option of doing work placements which usually occur one day a week.
