Testing for Toxic Elements: A Focus on Arsenic, Cadmium, Lead, and Mercury

For many substances, it will be necessary to consult the listings of carcinogens in this chapter see Tables and to identify chemical similarities to known carcinogens.

Preservation of dilute mercury solutions

Clinical signs and symptoms of toxicity are often different for acute vs chronic exposures but may be non-specific.

A field method for the detection of elemental mercury in sink traps

If an LCSS is not available, consultation with a safety professional such as a chemical hygiene officer may be necessary in order to determine whether a possible human carcinogen should be classified as a particularly hazardous substance. Using the analytical conditions specified, a nonlinear response was noted above 2 μg . Determination of mercury in biological materials by CV-AAS after wet digestion.
