In the third 1672—74, he served with the allied fleet that was defeated at Solebay on May 28, 1672, and was promoted captain. Feinting an attack upon the right, Marlborough concentrated his main attack upon the left, to the south of the village of Ramillies. Despite Marlborough's refutations claiming ancient precedent for the first allegation, and, for the second, producing a warrant signed by the Queen in 1702 authorising him to make the deductions in lieu of secret-service money for the war, the findings were enough for Harley to persuade the Queen to release her Captain-General.
