Not every girl has to wait for a prince to save her. To support countries in their efforts to fulfill and live up to their promise that by 2030 they will have closed the gender gap, the UNESCO Institute for Statistics UIS is disaggregating all sex-related indicators to the highest possible extent. The examples from Uganda and Nigeria highlight some of the challenges in changing teacher practices.

Social class and gender 'have huge effect on the way pupils are taught'

Photograph: Alamy Teachers should not tell children that they might be a different gender based on their personality or the clothes they want to wear, new guidance from the Department for Education states. Department of Education's Gender Equity Expert Panel, including a subpanel on teacher preparation, began work to design and implement a process for identifying, reviewing, and recommending promising and exemplary programs, products, and practices to educators and community members.

Washington, DC: Author and National Education Association. We talked about where these perceptions on men and women's roles in society came from, sometimes rewriting them to be more neutral and progressive.

Role of curriculum in gender inequality

During the late 1990s and early 2000s, a National Development Plan, partly funded by European Structural Funds ESF , saw Ireland adopting gender mainstreaming as a principle. This helps to explain the lower self-confidence, despite higher performance, of many girls in school.

Union wants to address gender imbalance among Irish teachers

Tips for classroom strategies After organizing your class in a way that promotes equality, the next step is to consider the effects of your actions in class. Irish women have more rights today than their mothers, grandmothers and great grandmothers ever had, but while significant progress has been made full gender equality has yet to be achieved. Journal articles EJ should be available at most research libraries; most documents ED are available in microfiche collections at more than 1,000 locations.
