In order to make the case for union even more compelling to local Baptists, efforts were made to write histories of specific churches with a view to demonstrating a common past for congregations with links to the late eighteenth or early nineteenth centuries. Beginning with New Testament Baptist origins, Porter highlighted early General British Baptists who were Arminian in theology, the common Free Baptist and Calvinistic Baptist participation in eighteenth-century revivals, the importance of Aline and the Free Will Baptists from New England who had been influenced by his theology, and a series of mergers among Nova Scotia's Arminian Baptists in the nineteenth century. So preoccupying was the debate over the nature and limits of sanctification that between 1882 and 1888 the exploration of denominational union was put on hold by the New Brunswick Free Baptists.

Chapter 6: A case study — The 1998 MUA dispute

The Maritime Union of Nigeria, Rivers State chapter has disclosed that over 4,000 of its members in Rivers State alone lost their jobs in three years of the administration of President Muhammadu Buhari. The significance of the convention's creation for this study rests entirely on the notion that all future alliances among Maritime Baptists would be significantly motivated by a similar desire to extend Christian read Baptist influence in the region and beyond.
