The three of them are said to have designed and built another pavilion, plainer but two-storied, named Uhwaru, which sits beside Gaun-ru in the lower courtyard. However, scholars note that this anecdote first appeared in the historical chronicle published in 1145, long after Choi had died, and now believe that Choi, a native and once-ardent supporter of Shilla, did not write it. To practice filial piety in the family and loyalty to the nation outside was taught by Confucius.
