A major threat to American democracy it seems to me is the enormous concentration of power in the hands of a very small number of individuals or small groups. The advent of helicopters allowed the M101, along with its heftier sibling the 155 mm M114, to attain air mobility suitable for either grueling campaigns like Vietnam or the fast-moving mechanized warfare that could erupt in the Central European Plain. These include a greater acceptance of international action by the global community, a development hastened by the end of the Cold War.
