T

These molecules are important because they regulate how a T cell will interact with and respond to an APC.

Immune system

Cytotoxic T Lymphocytes CTLs, a subclass of T cells, function to clear infections directly.

CD2

An intracellular pathogen is presented by a class I MHC molecule, and CD8 interacts with it. They are capable of phagocytosis but primarily they release their contents into the surrounding environment to kill microbes, especially parasitic worms, extracellularly. The two populations of T cells have different mechanisms of immune protection, but both bind MHC molecules via their antigen receptors called T cell receptors TCRs.

7.3 The Adaptive Immune Response: T Lymphocytes and their Functional Types

The number of d-hits is larger after vaccination than before with the exception of Q1 donor. However there are many unanswered questions with respect to the events described above: a. We then asked whether our method could identify TCRs specific to a particular target using an in vivo acute viral infection model.

CD2

They do not recognise self-antigens, however, but only processed antigen presented on their surfaces in a binding groove of a major histocompatibility complex molecule.
