Jeff Schmidt, Disciplined Minds

In this book I show that, in fact, professional education and employment push people to accept a role in which they do not make a significant difference, a politically subordinate role. As attitudes and values have come to play an increasingly important role in the production of goods and services, employers have faced a choice: either hire huge numbers of managers to direct every move of the large number of employees who now do politically sensitive work, or hire employees who can be trusted politically and merely check the results of their work.

Brainwashing the Corporate Way by John Pilger

Finally, a book that tells it like it is. He compares this to how three card monte schemes always place a fellow scammer in the crowd to convince the loser they lost.

Finally, a book that tells it like it is. Apart from that, I think I'll never forget the part where he compares how the funding agencies describe their projects, and how the professors that work on scientific projects for those agencies describe the very same work: The people who are actually in power and decide to give money to this or that professor, they are very blunt and straightforward in describing the problems to be solved, whereas the professors working on those problems describe the same work as if it were directed by their scientific, child-like curiosity, focused on discovering some abstract laws for understanding nature. Because like millions of others who work for a living, I was giving most of my prime time to my employer.

DISCIPLINED MINDS A CRITICAL LOOK AT SALARIED PROFESSIONALS AND THE SOUL BATTERING SYSTEM THAT SHAPES THEIR LIVES JEFF SCHMIDT

A surgery technique is more successful or not whatever political line you subscribe to as a doctor, right? Today's disillusioned professionals entered their fields expecting to do work that would 'make a difference' in the world and add meaning to their lives.
