How to List a Property

With some buildings it is possible to perceive that there is a visual linkage in a sequence of spaces, as in a hotel, from the lobby to the grand staircase to the ballroom. Once original features are gone, they can never truly be replaced — only imitated. It would seriously affect the character to remove the balcony, to enclose it, or to replace it with a balcony lacking the same degree of detail of the original material.

Chapter 26. Changing the Physical and Social Environment

Many communities devise comprehensive plans, based on their visions for the future that are then revisited and revised regularly usually every five or ten years. Historic buildings can be affordable for businesses to rehabilitate because of the possibility of tax incentives, grants, and other support for that activity. What was his source of information and how much time elapsed between the event and the record? Communities can encourage preservation by offering incentives of various kinds to offset some of the costs, usually in concert with regulations that require certain kinds of preservation activities in particular situations historic districts, properties with historical or architectural significance, etc.

Incentives and Grants for Historic Preservation

A group that included Harriet Beecher Stowe and Ralph Waldo Emerson spearheaded the first successful organized preservation effort in the nation, and launched the historic preservation movement in the U. The instruction documents may be in the form of an appointment notification, and direction from foreign office to the ambassador etc.

Changing the raised mortar joints, for example, would drastically alter the character at arm's length.
