East Africa Regional Development Cooperation Strategy

First the missionary builds a simple small house for himself, to which he soon adds a school and a church. None of them however formulated any kind of philosophical response to vernacular structures, choosing instead to view them as some kind of barometer against which to measure progress of a larger social and cultural nature. Most appear to have originated from the Eastern Cape and Transkei region Lovedale Missionary Institution 1896, where they also subsequently plied their trades Blue Books on Native Affairs 1880, but it is not impossible that, with time, they spread further afield.

The UN sent peacekeeping troops to Chad and the Central African Republic in 2007 to protect civilians, promote human rights, and foster regional peace. The decades-long movement within East Africa to integrate individual economies and address challenges through coordinated action is rooted in goals of using market scale, competition and collaboration to drive development. The missionary's work is not done when the work of the pulpit and the duties of religious instruction are over.

Generally he must himself superintend this work; often enough, indeed, he must execute it with his own hand, and it stands him in good stead to have been a tradesman at home. The former set standards which they then expected the people themselves to find the means to meet; the latter on the other hand not only trained workers in the technology of European building traditions but also gave them the opportunity of sharing in them by giving them those means.
