Making African integration a reality

Towards an African Continental Free Trade Area. As a result, many proponents of integration now pursue a less grandiose and more practical approach.

African Integration Report

Covid-19 has reminded us there are common challenges that African countries must address, but that we cannot resolve alone. Encourage states to enhance collection, analysis and dissemination of migration data in order to promote evidence-informed policy in Africa: Research findings gathered by researchers, NGOs, think tanks and CSOs disseminated across the continent can contribute to the formation of new ideas and concepts on the African migration narrative. In grappling with the challenges facing regional integration efforts in Africa, advocates of greater unity have identified a number of other requirements for success: -- involving civil associations, business groups, professionals and other sectors of society more actively in all integration endeavours -- achieving an appropriate balance between public and private economic initiatives -- reconciling the sometimes conflicting interests of countries with diverse sizes, natural resources and economic performance -- pursuing a pace of integration that is simultaneously ambitious and realistic -- rationalizing Africa's many different regional institutions, to reduce overlap and inefficiency.
