Volunteering in Public Health

People who volunteer make more money, partially because the relationships people create while volunteering can be leveraged for financial benefit.

Benefits for Young People

Meeting new people Finally, volunteering provides a great opportunity to meet people with similar interests and feel part of a community. Leading-edge fiscal and regulatory strategies face aggressive, often effective, opposition from lobby groups. Government intervention to establish accessible physical activity infrastructure for walking, cycling and play, and especially to curtail unhealthy marketing that affects children, is vital.

Policy and Research

With us young people discover what they care about, and are empowered to do something about it. In other words, what if the process imperatives of dealing with what these young people are presenting now distract from or even block the commitment, made before workers have ever met any of the volunteers, to do good for beneficiaries? Last Updated: 28 June 2017 Footnotes: This is based on tracking a range of government and other announcements of grants specifically made available to unformed youth organisations between 2012 and 2017, many of them channelled through Youth United.

Opportunities for Young People

The report shows that volunteers experience greater life satisfaction and overall better health than non-volunteers. In 2015, Volunteers aged 65 to 74 averaged 88 hours of annual volunteering and those 75 and older averaged 100 hours.
