their summits, ceaselessly swaying, kept up a deep murmur. She undressed, and cowered down between the sheets against Charles, who was asleep.

Madame Bovary

Chapter Nine Often when Charles was out she took from the cupboard, between the folds of the linen where she had left it, the green silk cigar case. I won't waste any more of my precious reading time on this.

Madame Bovary by Gustave Flaubert

For one can know Him as well in a wood, in a field, or even contemplating the eternal vault like the ancients. The carriage harness was piled up in the middle against two twisted columns, and the bits, the whips, the spurs, the curbs, were ranged in a line all along the wall.

Madame Bovary Quotes by Gustave Flaubert

Her version benefits from her finesse as a writer and seems fresh and different compared to other translations.
