In any study of this kind, the placing of the institution in question in an established historical narrative is essential to a nuanced understanding.

Dictionary of National Biography, 1885

In making the first posting to this blog in which it is my intention to share some of the more interesting and infamous aspects of my researches and interests, it seems only appropriate that I should go back to foundational basics and the one building which I can safely say first inspired my passion for architectural history. William Robinson settled at Kendal in the reign of Henry VIII, and his eldest son, Ralph, became owner of Rokeby in the North Riding of Yorkshire by his marriage with the eldest daughter and coheirress of James Philips of Brignal, near Rokeby. Patrick having been appropriated by the called the at the time of the.
