5. Comparison & Contrast

- Use comparison to consider the likenesses between two items.
- Use contrast to consider the differences between two items.
- In formal comparison or contrast, consider items that are in the same class, and make sure that the class is sufficiently narrow for the comparison or contrast to be meaningful.

- In a paragraph developed by formal comparison or contrast, you may use either the items under consideration or the bases as main headings in outlining your paragraph. Usually the latter is preferable.
- In informal comparison or contrast, you may relax the rules for formal comparison or contrast in order to support the controlling idea in a more effective way than formal comparison or contrast would allow.
- In informal comparison or contrast, you may place one or both items under consideration in a very broad or even an imaginary or "farfetched" class.
