Romanization of Japanese

Following the expulsion of Christians from Japan in the late 1590s and early 17th century, rōmaji fell out of use and was used sporadically in foreign texts until the mid-19th century, when Japan opened up again.

Linguapedia: Rōmaji

Today, the use of Nihon-shiki for writing Japanese is advocated by the sect and some independent organizations. Later, in the early 20th century, some scholars devised syllabary systems with characters derived from Latin rather like the that were even less popular since they were not based on any historical use of the Latin script. It is also used to transliterate Japanese terms in text written in English or other languages that use the Latin script on topics related to Japan, such as linguistics, literature, history, and culture.
