Education in Northern Ireland

In addition to this, there are two independent schools teaching through the medium of Irish. Pressure has continued on the Department of Education, especially by groups focusing on inter-faith or inter-ethnic relations, equality and human rights, in opposition to the exclusive role of the Churches in the production of the Core Syllabus and in favour of a more inclusive and intercultural approach, but so far such arguments have made little or no impact. Those who teach in primary schools in the maintained sector are required to demonstrate that they can do so in line with Catholic principals.

Education in Northern Ireland

Exempt from fair employment legislation, it is permitted to discriminate against non-Catholic teachers. Other posts have no such restrictions and consequently have 8% of those teaching in maintained secondary schools come from the Protestant background. As the largest employer of teachers in Northern Ireland 8,500 teachers, the CCMS plays a central role in supporting teachers whether through its welfare service or, for example, in working parties such as the Independent Inquiry into Teacher Pay and Conditions of Service.

Opt

That was then, this is now. They're required to teach all subjects.

CAIN: Majority Minority Review No.1: Education and Religion in Northern Ireland, Section 1

A common management system for schools attended by both Protestant and Catholic pupils was proposed, but was resisted by the churches on both sides. Those doors need to be opened to at least allow teachers the opportunity to walk through and into the 21st century.

UK: Northern Ireland

The number of pupils attending controlled schools is 140,632, approximately 42% of all pupils in Northern Ireland.

Religious Education

The 1998 Belfast Good Friday Agreement established a power-sharing devolved government representing both sides of the cultural, political and religious divide, though at the time of writing February 2018 this arrangement has not functioned for over a year, and there remains some uncertainty about how this may be resolved. All schools in Northern Ireland follow the Northern Ireland Curriculum which is based on the National Curriculum used in England and Wales. North Eastern formerly NEELB Antrim, Ballymena, Ballymoney, Carrickfergus, Coleraine, Larne, Magherafelt, Moyle, Newtownabbey 3.

CAIN: Majority Minority Review No.1: Education and Religion in Northern Ireland, Section 1

The educational system in Northern Ireland can be divided into primary, secondary and tertiary levels. The Syllabus which can be viewed online — see below restricts itself to a list of content appropriate to each age group.
