However, several key proponents, such as Bratton and Kelling, argue that there is a key difference. This view, which is still reflected in some 21st-century books, portrays Bacon as an advocate of modern experimental science who emerged as a solitary genius in an age hostile to his ideas. The belief is that students are signaled by disorder or rule-breaking and that they in turn imitate the disorder.

Glass Blowing BFA

Plank and colleagues from conducted a correlational study to determine the degree to which the physical appearance of the school and classroom setting influence student behavior, particularly in respect to the variables concerned in their study: fear, social disorder, and collective efficacy.
