Melb, Oxford University Press, 1983 1st ed. The opportunity for the people of Maldon to display their true feelings may not have been possible in the early Easter Parades but today the Parade offers just that, and I find it highly significant, that although people are free to demonstrate dissatisfaction with their present situations, so few of them felt strongly enough about anything to do so Easter itself, of course, is an invented tradition. In addition, they are of considerable age, dating from the 1860s during Maldon's heyday as a premier quartz mining town.
