Further, supervision can have therapy-like qualities as you explore countertransferential issues with supervisees, and there is an expectation of professional growth and self-exploration. Developmental Stages of Counselors Counselors are at different stages of professional development.

Outreach Training Program

One supervisor assists counselor development in a group of supervisee peers. The competencies listed in TAP 21-A reflect the importance of culture in supervision. Supervision needs to be tailored to the knowledge base, skills, experience, and assignment of each counselor.

Training and Professional Development

The two types of evaluation are formative and summative. This TIP addresses two of the most frequently voiced concerns of supervisors: documentation and time management.
