Native American Indian Chiefs

Although the Dutch wanted to trade with everyone, the Pequot were determined to dominate the smaller Nipmuc and Mattabesic tribes in the area and control their access to the Dutch. The historical Chief Seattle was the head man of the Duwamish and several other related small bands of Indians inhabiting the shores of Puget Sound. On the morning of August 12 he had his men arranged silently.

Smith was fluent in the Duwamish tongue and thus was able to transcribe Seattle's words verbatim.

Mohegan History

If one should go to sleep, or fail to answer the whoop of his companion, an older warrior would soon issue from Powhatan's cabin and flail the offender with a stout wooden cudgel. Meat and fish were peddled from carts and vegetables came from neighboring farmers — milk also — and chicken and eggs. The whites gave the red men no quarter when they caught them.
