Philodemus (Stanford Encyclopedia of Philosophy)

Maria La Touche, a minor Irish poet and novelist, asked Ruskin to teach her daughters drawing and painting in 1858. These properties can then safely be projected, by sign-inference, to all or any other members of the kind, as, for example, it is inferred that mortality belongs to all human beings everywhere. The professional woman politician has had, up to the present, not much influence, nor do women generally regard her as being the most important element in question.
