Black Nature: Four Centuries of African American Nature Poetry

The critical wisdom accumulated here is as important as the beautifully structured cycles that Dungy uses as landscaped categories to contain these important poems. This collection features major writers such as Phillis Wheatley, Rita Dove, Yusef Komunyakaa, Gwendolyn Brooks, Sterling Brown, Robert Hayden, Wanda Coleman, Natasha Trethewey, and Melvin B. I think that is changing, though.

Black Nature: Four Centuries of African American Nature Poetry by Camille T. Dungy

Are we a God-fearing country, or do we stand for religious liberty? I believe the book should be widely read, taught, and talked about. Parker: What does being an American mean to you? My own skin color represents ancestors from Sweden, France, northern and southern India, Peru, and the northern Sonoran Desert.

But the University of California, Berkeley, is hosting a March 4-5 symposium of leading poets and scholars who will explore 400 rich years of African American nature writing, as evidenced in a new, first-ever anthology of nature poetry by black writers. Praise for the anthology Just as nature is too often defined as wilderness when, in fact, nature is everywhere we are, our nature poetry is too often defined by Anglo-American perspectives, even though poets of all backgrounds write about the living world. Do not raise your small voice against it.

While the topics discussed have kept up with our political climate and the lives we live, more often than not the person being interviewed has race, class, and gender privilege. It is the same with writing.

Black Nature event explores environment for African American voices

It was a hot spring day, starting to feel like summer, and she showed me the patch of wildflowers she was cultivating to replace most of the lawn. She looked in the mirror and made a tremendous scowl. Dungy has selected 180 poems from 93 poets that provide unique perspectives on American social and literary history to broaden our concept of nature poetry and African American poetics.
