It is dated 14th Feby 1775, and is apparently among the earliest British hand-drawn maps of land in the colonial Mississippi Valley in existence. Our readers may form an idea of the tabernacle and the court, sufficiently accurate for all practical purposes, by allowing one yard English for every two cubits.

Letter to Lord Weymouth, 1689. Nothing, therefore, could have been more simple than to loop up these curtains to the pillars by which they were supported, and thus to afford a full view of the tabernacle to those who stood without.

Robert Stewart, Viscount Castlereagh

Weymouth and 1st Marquis of Bath. Grahme see the Collection at Levens Hall, Westmorland HMC Tenth Report 16-17, Appendix IV 318-347 cross reference Letter to W. Your notes are perfectly good, and so are your preface and essay.

Natchez Trace Collection Supplement, 1775

To vindicate ones self against such nasty slander, is much as wise as it was in your countryman, when the people imputed a stink to him, to prove the contrary by showing his backside. William Waller, a State Engineer for Louisiana, writes his brother Henry, an Assistant State Engineer, who is at Donaldson, about news of the 2nd Dragoons' march to Texas, surveying projects for planters, and the importance of protecting survey equipment.
