Pickler Memorial Library Microform Collections

Hence, for many rolls several dozen or more access points exist. Privileging the popular voices of the region, the collections document numerous political and social movements, and a wide variety of key socioeconomic and cultural developments.

Primary Sources: Microfilm Collections at DePaul

Types of primary materials collected include pamphlets, non-commercially produced and distributed serials, flyers, posters, working papers, government publications, and other non-traditional formats.

Princeton University Latin Ameri

The availability of original materials is indicated in this guide by the appearance of a Rare Books Ex call number. While it took some years to devise and build support for a digital project, collecting of ephemera continued uninterrupted and a vast backlog of approximately 12,000 ephemeral items developed and remained essentially unavailable to researchers. A complete list of collections appears in the Guide to the Princeton University Latin American Microfilm Collection Wilmington, DE: Scholarly Resources, 1993 and subsequent supplements.

PLAS

Intensive collecting in this area continues to this date. Most of the documentation in the collections was produced after the mid 1960s by Latin American nongovernmental organizations of all types, interest groups, political parties, research institutes, and government agencies.

PLAS

Once collections are fully organized, they are cataloged and microfilmed.
