Palmer, and Center of Military History. In the Netherlands, for example, both Seyss-Inquart, the Reich Commissioner, and Rauter, the Higher SS and Police Leader, are stated to have objected to the decree on the ground that it would only drive the Dutch all the more into the illegal organizations, although in the end Himmler himself seems to have intervened to ensure that the measure was enforced as Hitler intended. But, like them, they fought anonymously so far as the general public either in Allied or enemy countries realized.
