Local Economic Development (LED)

That is because the economic development effectiveness of any particular investment may hinge upon the extent of other remaining barriers to economic development. It works by incorporating elements of as well as and analysis to identify needs for improvement and paths for economic growth. This paper investigates the current status of LED in South Africa, where, over the past decade, local governments, community groups and non-governmental organisations NGOs have become significantly...

Handbook: Assessing Local Economic Development Opportunities with ARC

It provides local economic , and for comparison of economic development factors against competing regions. The need is particularly high for regions that seek economic benefits from public and private investments in new infrastructure, facilities, and support services. LED is less widely implemented in the South where, in most instances, it appears to be still in an incipient phase.
