The Wild Life (1984)

A lot of birds have dance moves. Byrne wrote about this scene: The song itself becomes a vehicle that can say anything they want it to. It was still funny and I enjoyed but it had no point.

WILD THINGS: DANCE IS LIFE — FOR SOME

The settlers who traveled out West in the late 19th and early 20th centuries had to live in defiance of nature and the elements without the comforts of civilization. Male Bearded Manakins — actually, the males of a lot of manakin species — lounge about all day at rainforest leks, which kind of function like dance halls, and wait for female manakins to stop by, so they can compete to impress them with their leaps and wing snaps.

The Wild Life (1984)

A species account is basically the scientific lowdown on a bird — what it looks like, where it lives, what it eats, its sexual proclivities — all that good stuff. Some gestures and movements are obviously derived from well-known sources: television shows.

Wild Wild Life

Usually it starts with a run. Animals that also usually make good cartoon characters.

Wild Wild Life

The point, of course, is not to entertain the fish, but to scare them, confound them, confuse them. Imagine viewing something choreographed by Martha Graham or Alvin Ailey with the sound off.
