In advanced service sectors, of course, knowledge is the product. This is in keeping with the reality: throughout mercantile modernity, Europe was not the leading world region as Frank 1998 has so clearly demonstrated. Well-known examples of such basic spatial ordering are the traditional Chinese Sino-centric view of the world around their 'middle kingdom', the Moslem division between the House of Islam and the House of War as set out in the sharia, the medieval Christian 'T and O map' of the world with Jerusalem at the centre, and the modern society's division of humanity into a mosaic of 'nation-states'.
