And it's the plot which carries things, since the characterizations are fairly flat. After spending 36 years in prison, and narrowly missing being executed for the crime, the alleged murderer wants to clear her name for the sake of her daughter who, at 10 years old, testified against her mother at the trial. As I read though I got drawn into Muller's way of telling a story which made me interested in what was happening and care about the outcome.
