Mauriac, François 1885

Mauriac was born in Bordeaux on 11 October 1885, the fourth child of Jean-Paul and Claire Coiffard Mauriac. Mauriac's intense relationship with the young eyewitness leads him to hope that as many people will read Wiesel's Night as read Anne Frank's Diary of a Young Girl. They deal with the dual problem of art and the realization of human personality.

Mauriac, François (1885

I think there's more than you are where you want to be when people can want opposing ends. Le Mystère Frontenac 1933; translated as The Frontenac Mystery, 1952 has been hailed as a hymn to the family. In La Robe prétexte Jacques is the narrator, telling about his adolescence, about the formative years in which he became conscious of his vocation.

He was awarded the Grand Cross of the in 1958. Whenever anyone has told me that I made them feel less alone I'd feel sick for the impending drop. The novel gives a totally different impression—that of a useless, absurd sacrifice of youth, love, and, above all, of poetic talent, to the forces of mediocrity, hate, and death represented by the family and the Church.

François Mauriac (Mauriac, François, 1885

He cannot come to terms with woman, he cannot transform the bad mother frigid, part virgin, part prostitute into the good mother, a source of inspiration. Mauriac claimed that the honor he received made him more aware of his social and political responsibility as a writer and as an intellectual.
