10 Reasons to Choose a Career in Law

Although every philosophical theory is in part a product of the time, place, and in which it is developed, the philosophy of law is in an additional sense. In trying to understand a seeming paradox, we have discovered how closely interwoven rationality is with Islamic belief and how this affects the practical application of divine will to earthly law. This argument holds in respect of affirmative and negative precepts about the same kind of deed: although even then it is not altogether cogent.

Treatise on Law

On the contrary, The Apostle says Rm. But those things which are derived from the law of nature by way of particular determination, belong to the civil law, according as each state decides on what is best for itself. Hence, in the judgment of God, the sovereign is not exempt from the law, as to its directive force; but he should fulfil it to his own free-will and not of constraint.

Practical Reason in Law and Morality

Wherefore we observe the same in all those who govern, so that the plan of government is derived by secondary governors from the governor in chief; thus the plan of what is to be done in a state flows from the king's command to his inferior administrators: and again in things of art the plan of whatever is to be done by art flows from the chief craftsman to the under-crafts-men, who work with their hands. And as every judgment of speculative reason proceeds from the natural knowledge of first principles, so every judgment of practical reason proceeds from principles known naturally, as stated above Q94, AA2,4 : from which principles one may proceed in various ways to judge of various matters.

Good Reason

Both ways, however, are imperfect, and to a certain extent destroyed, in the wicked; because in them the natural inclination to virtue is corrupted by vicious habits, and, moreover, the natural knowledge of good is darkened by passions and habits of sin.

Consequently, considered thus, all acts of virtue are prescribed by the natural law: since each one's reason naturally dictates to him to act virtuously. The ultimate problem, I suspect, is that students are consumers, paying a lot of money in tuition. Therefore the law of nature can be abolished from the heart of man.
