Local Historic Districts

Jeff has been an independent historic preservation consultant since 2013, focusing on preservation planning, fundraising, and project management work and previously worked at Historic Boston, Inc. When Mark signed himself up for his first post-graduate courses in historic preservation over two decades ago, it was a major departure from the pre-med track he had been following. The Local Historical Commission or Historical Society are also often involved because of their access to historical information necessary to establish the Baseline Documentation required in a

Preservation Restriction.

State Historic Preservation Offices

Erin holds a Bachelor of Science in Historic Preservation from Roger Williams University and has a deep love of preservation, history, the arts and her tiny Southeastern MA hometown. This combined commission is known as either the Historical Commission or the Historic District Commission.

Massachusetts Historical Society

Maintain annual status reports on the property. This included many famous buildings in Boston and New York.

Local Historic Districts

The administrator should follow up annual on-site meetings with a written status report on the property, citing the owner's compliance with the restrictions and the general condition of the property.

Massachusetts

Communication is essential if there is a transfer of ownership, so administrators may want to initiate contact with new property owners. Who can hold a Preservation Restriction? To help people interpret the standards and to provide more detailed recommendations for treatment of specific building elements, the Secretary also publishes Guidelines for Rehabilitating Historic Buildings.
