Both Victimizers and Victims

While the crime is still fresh in their minds, victims may find that the police interrogation following the crime is handled callously, with innuendos or insinuations that they were somehow at fault. It is important to remember that child victims often feel very confused about the abuse while it is ongoing. Retrospective labeling happens when the deviant recognizes his acts as deviant prior to the primary deviance, while prospective labeling is when the deviant recognizes future acts as deviant. This latter pattern is particularly notable in cases of sexual abuse.
