Romans in Britain

The German pottery often had white markings and inscriptions. These cremation urns were all made using Romano-British wheel-throwing techniques but, as both Maggie Darling and Kevin Leahy have observed, they cannot be seen as re-used Roman-era pots due to their body-shapes and fabrics, and are instead considered to represent products of the mid- to late fifth-century 'post-Roman' British pottery industry, given their phasing in the cemetery.

The Pottery Kilns of Roman Britain by Vivien Swan

Pottery was produced in buildings built mainly of timber about 120ft x 60ft 37m x 18m in size. Pottery came in a variety of shapes, sizes and uses.

Caitlin Green: Romano

Pottery manufacture Earthenware became a much demanded product due to the changing style of life and potteries were founded all over Britain. In this light, Lincoln's Local Coarse Pebbly ware LCOA may also be of some potential interest. You're free to cite these drafts if they are of interest, and are reminded that academic blogs are indeed under most citation systems.
