Pier advice

There is little evidence of human occupation during the Eemian. This makes a brave sight when the big yellow flowers are nodding in an April breeze, but for 6 months of the year once the flag shoots are fallen, you have a water-level fringe of very tough matted rhizome roots one or two yards wide, which itself makes a good casting platform. As I recall, the Lugg was already going quite hard then, but I'm sure this should turn up sooner or later.

The Wye and Usk Foundation

A few years ago such a project would have been unthinkable for a club of members dedicated to wild sea trout and salmon.

WELSH WEATHERPIX

However, be aware that even if you kill and spoon your fish, you may not find the expected evidence of fry feeding as the bodies of small fish are much more rapidly digested than the hard exoskeletons of insects which may survive for quite a while in the stomach acid. I hope there is way through for anglers. The arrowheads, ogival in shape with drooping barbs longer than the tang, are rare in Wales but generally have a Beaker horizon in England.

Llyn Bugeilyn

Thank you to all those that helped with stewarding and dummy throwing. I believe the Surgeon's knot is very slightly weaker for droppers although it is certainly easy to make and I have used it experimentally on numerous occasions.
