Of the students who did not read any books, the most frequently expressed reason was that they were too busy. The relationship of pleasure reading and second language writing proficiency.

Annotated Bibliography

In 1950 it was still going on in the College. At the beginning of each quarter a list of the works of the authors to be read was given to the students; special attention was called to the most important works, but the students were allowed to read and report on any work included in the list. This abstract is not the same thing as an annotation.

Inclusive, quality education: an annotated bibliography

Possible explanations for this discrepancy in results are discussed. The authors found that not only was the extensive reading course at least as useful as a reading skills course for enhancing student reading ability, but extensive reading also encouraged students to develop a habit of reading in the L2 and to see L2 reading as enjoyable.
