Cannundrums: Various Groups Start (October 1 to 10, 1849)

There was no use in endeavouring to steal on them, for all our motions were easily discernible; so I ordered up five of our best mounted men, who, with myself, rode forward, as if pursuing our journey, to a point where the slope was easiest, where, like contending jockies coming to the post, we set off at top-speed. As I pressed forward to his assistance, I saw he drifted on to a shoal bar, where he again got to his legs, and was enabled to make a fresh start. Those to leeward of us did not remain long contiguous, crossing over the bluffs in enormous batches, for it is an extraordinary peculiarity of the buffalo, that it will run from the scent of a white man much sooner than from his person, while they are indifferent to that of the Indian, though he is more frequently in collision with them, and their sense of smelling is so very acute, a pale-face has not a chance of getting near them, unless he goes right up the wind.
