methodology of planning for education

Planning for implementation facilitates the process of implementation of programmes and projects by providing a sound mechanism of monitoring in the form of implementation schedule and it also increases the efficiency of the system by minimizing the costs of implementation of a given programme or project. This manual describes a new methodology to measure a decent but basic standard of living in different countries and how much workers need to earn to afford this, making it possible for researchers to estimate comparable living wages around the world and determine gaps between living wages and prevailing wages, even in countries with limited secondary data.

This type of methodology is not acceptable because there cannot be a different living wage for every factory and have that depend on the spending and demographic composition of employees in the factory, since this could lead to discrimination based on age, sex, marital status, family size, and work participation of spouses. This reflects into a significant increase in days worked per month and hours per week.

Education in Developing Countries

There is a growing demand for data reflecting quality as well as access to education, particularly in the early years where learning outcomes are an important foundation for later progress. After one year, the program had large positive effects on school enrollment for both girls in school at baseline 89. Thus, for women much of the gain in employment was into formal jobs.

School entry age and educational attainment in developing countries: Evidence from China's compulsory education law

The effect is estimated for the overall sample, but it is possible that it is driven primarily by this subgroup and therefore explained by income, not educational effects.

Columns 3 and 4 show that although the program had little effect on the prevalence of pregnancy in either treatment arm after 1 year, there is a large decline in the UCT arm by Round 3. Both male and female scholarship winners that were admitted to academic tracks adopted more preventative health behaviors more handwashing, bednet use, and mosquito repellent use , though students admitted to vocational tracks experienced no statistically significant change in preventative health behaviors. One of these studies found no effect on time in school.
