House of Representatives, Debates, 29 August 1963 :: Historic Hansard

Fichte Fichte was a less profound thinker than Herder, but he has an essential place in any account of the development of nationalist thought because he contributed elements of national pride, verbal aggression and messianic political vision that were to find expression in the ideas and activities of so many subsequent nationalist politicians.

Nationalism and National Integration

Do not members of the Opposition agree that the single pensioner is under a more severe financial handicap than the married pensioner couple? A case in point is the University of Louvain, which had to abandon its bilingualism in the face of Flemish insistence that all courses given within Flanders should be given in Flemish, forcing its francophone professors and students to move elsewhere see Laponce, 1987, p.

I believe that many of these problems could be solved if this Government showed any interest in this subject. It has been taken seriously in these paragraphs only because it has so often been cited by scholars. In a world where we have to develop very rapidly, we must be a little adventurous with some of our policies.

Nationalism and National Integration

We are to spend £13,000,000 this year in bringing immigrants to Australia.

First, I propose to deal with part 3 of the amendment, and I read into it unemployment benefits as provided for by the Department of Social Services but for which no provision for increases has been made in the bill under discussion. More of the work of production has indeed been transferred to fall technically under the heading of service firms and industries, to design and computer consultants, to advertising and legal agents, or to catering, security or transport suppliers Sayer and Walker, 1992. They have no coverage for medical expenses.

There should, for example, be no objection on this ground to teaching Italian instead of French to the children of Italian immigrants in Australia. Our record in relation to pensioner health services is a very proud one, as it is also with regard to assistance to State governments for the construction of hospitals and a whole host of other services.
