On the other hand, one might wonder if we, through this type of travel, are reproducing those same historical postcolonial economic patterns. In Timbuktu, where there is still less electricity each day than there was under Islamist rule and pockets of rebels lurk in the desert not far away, residents have flocked to rallies brought to life by electric guitars and local dancers. So by linking theory and practice I was hoping to encourage dialogue between the two.

The Politics of Protection: The Limits of Humanitarian Action

Prior to the Kosovo conflict, the country hosted the largest caseload of refugees in Europe, some half a million refugees from the Krajina. Have you got any experience? Do you like it here? Finally, we have included a new summary table on the four types of migrants.
