An Exclusive Interview with Professor Homidezra Hyatolohy

1. Would you like to provide us with your opinion on the importance and relevance of the issue of secularism and nonresistance for Islamic communities in the contemporary world?

Those who have been nurtured on Western thought turn inevitably to the concepts of religion and God. These are very important in their culture. But words do not always have the same meaning when used by different cultures. Therefore, it is necessary to define what is meant by religion and God. This is a very important issue for Islamic communities.

To anyone familiar with Islam, it is very clear that there are many words that do not have the same meaning in English as they do in Arabic or other European languages. There is no Islamic distinction between the religious and secular, or the sacred and profane. This is a very important issue for Islamic communities.

The so-called dilemma of religion on the state has long history in Western culture that can be understood in its context. There is a belief among Muslims that the understanding of the problem is not complete without understanding the nature of Christianity and especially (not predominantly) what brought a secular solution to the problem.

The essence of Christianity is so that the best way for protecting religion and the state is to separate the two. This is an important aspiration that could reach a wide acceptance in Western culture, while this is not so clear.

First of all we must study the essential differences of Islam and Christianity in this aspect for a deep understanding of the problem. In this article I will try to explain the importance of all social and political dimensions of human life in Islamic communities are quite different from Christianity which is more individual and ethical religion.

As noted above, he overlooks entirely my lengthy discussion of the reasons why US policy in the Middle East is deadlocked; nor does he address my argument that neither Europe nor the Arab states have sufficient will or leverage to alter US policy. In a world of fast-growing productivity and disruptive innovation, demand may fail to keep pace with supply, which suggests that for a while, appropriately measured high productivity growth may be associated with high or rising unemployment. Rather than designating a specific time for school, Torchlight encourages parents to weave learning into daily life — encouraging parents to break up learning throughout the day and incorporate learning into regular activities like running errands and bedtime stories.
