Theoretical Perspectives on Gender and Development

Strict implementation of registration of births and deaths would be ensured and registration of marriages would be made compulsory. In Community Environment Action: The National Policy Context, Fabio Feldmann states that long-term sustainable behavioral changes in a community require that an empowered local institution work along side national legislative and executive institutions. In so doing, they often ignored the traditional egalitarianism of many precolonial societies, in which women had greater power and autonomy and life was more in tune with nature and the environment, not based on its destruction.

Issue 7: Women Empowerment

I wanted to study a development approach whose assumptions were informed by the spiritual principles of the Baha'i Faith, specifically the link between the equality of women and men and the building of a sustainable civilization. To promote gender equality and the empowerment of women as effective ways to combat poverty, hunger and disease and to stimulate development that is truly sustainable.

National Policy for Women Empowerment

While in Bolivia, I offered service in the form of technical development deepening as a gift of my appreciation to the beautiful and generous people I met.

Office for Women's Development

Frequently, these case studies reveal, men seek short-term fixes to immediate problems, and it is the women who keep the well-being of the village's future generation in mind and heart. The WE approach generally ignored the impact of global inequities on women in the Third World and the importance of race and class in women's lives.

World survey on the role of women in development

However, one very short interview stands out in my mind as a solid example of why it is important for women to speak and for womens voice to be heard in making decisions about the environment. Although this describes the impact of restructuring on the majority of women, some women in the South and in the North are doing quite well. In Different Places, Different Voices.
